DESIGN WIRE

1 PAUL LEWANDOWSKI, architect and design leader at SMRT, designed a raincoat for Betabrand—the Nor'Easter—that will be released for commercial sales in fall 2014. Lewandowski's day job may be as an architect, but his love of textile design has always been with him: he made his wife's wedding dress, garments for friends, he even flirted with a chance to compete on Project Runway. The Nor'Easter's design reflects his Maine roots, as it was created with Maine fishermen in mind—heavy duty and with an aesthetic that resembles the color blocking of a lobster buoy. Presales are expected to begin in April.

2 The new HAMILTON LEARNING CENTER on Route 1 in Searsport is now open and hosting boatbuilding classes and workshops taught by boat craftsman Greg Lossil. The space, formerly Hamilton Marine Seine Loft, was donated by Wayne and Loraine Hamilton to the Penobscot Marine Museum and was recently renovated to provide more space for the workshops.

3 CAPE ARUNDEL INN & RESORT in Kennebunkport is hosting an "Artist on the Lawn" series from Memorial Day to Labor Day. Local artists, such as Judith Kinsman, who specializes in landscapes, will set up easels outside the inn and provide lessons for guests looking to polish their painting skills while overlooking the deep blue Atlantic horizon.

4 There's a new home design spot in Kittery, the AMY DUTTON GALLERY, opened by local architectural and interior designer Amy Dutton. The gallery is set up like a home and features artisan-crafted furniture, lighting, and other products made by Dutton—like her fabric line made into window treatments, pillows, and bedding—and by other local artisans such as potter Zoe Zillion, furniture maker Craig White, rug designer Angela Adams, steel artist Nate Deyesso, and lamp designer Barbara Gail.
