

Obsession of the Day: Dermelect's Anti-Aging Nail Polish—For Younger-Looking Fingertips!

By Danica Loon on June 25, 2012

As a woman of, ahem, a certain age, there are things on my body that I'm starting to worry about—especially when it comes to aging. Mostly, they're gravity-related—wrinkles, fine lines, skin tone and texture. But one thing I hadn't thought much about—until now, that is—is how my nails are faring.

The thing is, I've always had sort of not-great nails. They're fine when I take care of them—i.e. moisturize them every night, avoid nail polish and acetone remover, pet them and coddle them and speak sweetly to them and stuff—but one wrong move, one buff gone awry, and they're a peely, chipped, dry, ridge-y mess.

Who knew that a lot of these are a sign of aging?

Enter Dermelect and its new collection of 'Me' anti-aging nail polishes—six colors infused with pure protein peptides to combat nail fragility and weakness. The water and detergent-resistant high-gloss colors—Persuasive (peach), Provocative (fuchsia), Above It (sky blue), Head Turner ((orange), Luxurious (lilac), and Power Trip (red with pink undertones)—are DBP, Toulene, Formaldehyde, and cruelty-free and protects your nails against UV rays.

They're brand-new and priced at $14 a bottle. Finally, a mani-pedi polish that won't make my nails peel!

Have you tried Dermelect's anti-aging nail colors? Tell us what you think in the comments.